My professor has provided no contact, and tomorrow is the last day to drop without penalty. What should I do?

My biology professor is quite old and old fashioned and is anti-computer. He doesn't use Blackboard, he said he doesn't use his CUNY email, and didn't get any of our emails. He did give us his personal email, which I did message him but got no response.

Tomorrow is the last day to drop without penalty. I don't know how I'd do my labs virtually if he did decide to go virtual, but I'm not sure what's going on. What if he fails the class???

Also, my school (Laguardia) says the school is open for labs? I don't want to go in for labs. We shouldn't be outside.

I'm so confused. Class starts TOMORROW. All 4 of my other classes are doing Zoom.

Anyone else have professors not reach out? Anyone have a science professor reach out and explain the lab situation?

If you don't hear from your professor today, try reaching out to the department chair tonight. As far as in-person labs go, it's pretty tough for some majors to get the experience they need in the lab remotely, but you could also contact your professor to see if they can accommodate you not coming in (for instance, if you're at-risk because you or someone in your household has a pre-existing condition or because of age). Or if you can/want to, you might ask if you can drop that class and re-enroll in the lab in Fall semester.
